Mandarin Oriental, New York's style reflects the Group's exotic Oriental heritage, as is seen in the use of works of art and small details, adding to the overall luxurious feel of the hotel. Also reflected in the design are more contemporary elements, a nod to the property's New York City location. Situated at Columbus Circle, the point from which all distances to and from Manhattan are measured, the hotel stands at a cornerstone of Central Park, serving as the perfect meeting point, bridging East and West, North and South.

The opening of the hotel in December 2003 marked the completion of the first phase of one of New York City's premier mixed-use real estate projects. In addition to the hotel, the development includes Deutsche Bank's North America headquarters, premier retailers, world-class dining—including Thomas Keller's Per Se and Masa of renowned sushi chef Masa Takayama—office and residential components, and a 100,000 square-foot world-class performance hall for Jazz at Lincoln Center.
