WELLNESS DICTIONARY

AÇAÍ BERRY

Acai berries have more antioxidants than almost any other fruit and contain high levels of essential fatty acids, amino acids, and dietary fiber.

CAROB

Carob powder is dark roasted for a rich chocolate flavor. Carob powder is naturally sweet, low in fat, and caffeine-free, which makes it the perfect replacement for cacao powder in your recipes.

GOJI BERRY

Known as the anti-aging fruit, goji berries are an excellent source of antioxidants, these dried berries may help enhance the immune system, protect your eyesight and improve liver function.

MACA ROOT

Maca root provides a natural energy boost without the jittery side effects of caffeine. Load up on protein with organic buckwheat sprouts, sprouted almonds, and more. All the super food cereals come together with the naturally sweet taste of clover honey and organic coconut.

MULBERRIES

Mulberries have a mild sweet flavor that is similar in taste to dried goji berries and figs. These berries are dried so they have a slightly crunchy texture.

QUINOA

Quinoa (pronounced keen-wah) is a light, fluffy, edible seed that feels and tastes more like a grain. Quinoa is a complete protein and contains twice as much dietary fiber as other grains.

SPIRULINA

Spirulina is vivid blue - green algae that commonly grows in freshwater lakes and ponds. It's considered a complete protein, containing an ideal balance of all 9 essential amino acids. Its protein is more digestible than other rich protein sources such as red meat and soy.
