AN EYE FOR A PEARL

Miso | Caramel | Rooibos | Apple | Ginger Ale

Japan became fascinated in the pearls of the Middle East. Travelers coming from Africa frequently stopped by in the Middle East and began bringing these shiny pearls back to the East where they became a big hit.

HEXI

Earl Grey | 5 Spice | Tamarind | Apple

China was the biggest consumer along the Silk Route, but it was always difficult to navigate across. The Hexi corridor was established to help this and this is when the Silk Route really started to take off.

FLOWER IN THE PLAINS

Pomegranate | Rose | Coriander | Hibiscus

Floral Perfumes were found across Arabia. These were produced from rose fields which would appear, almost out of nowhere amongst the Arabian desert.

TALAD NAAM

Dragon Fruit | Papaya | Thai Basil | Passionfruit

Southeast Asia started becoming a part of the Silk Route when there was a demand for its tropical fruits and jasmine rice. At risk of the fruit's quality dropping with each passing day, Thailand would use the Mekong river to transport them quicker. Locals quickly started trading along this river and creating what is known locally as Talad Naam, floating market, which are still around today.
