SUNTORY

The co-founder of the Japanese whisky category with Nikka's Masataka Taketsuru is Shinjiro Torii, who built the country's first whisky distillery in 1923 in a narrow mountain valley outside Kyoto. Fifty years later, his company built two new distilleries: a modern grain distillery on the Chita Peninsula and a high altitude malt distillery in the Japanese Southern Alps. Each produce whisky combined with Yamazaki to produce the award-winning Hibiki blends.

NIKKA

Below, we have three styles of Japanese whisky: an ancient blend, three blended malts, and three single malts. The blend is a mixture of malt whisky from Yoichi and grain whisky distilled in 1965 and bottled in 1999. The "pure malts" - now known as "blended malts" - are a mixture of single malt whiskies. The single malts are exclusively from Yoichi, which produces peaty whisky in an Islay-like climate via direct fire: where the stills are heated with coal, as Scotch whisky once was.
