

The Blind Men and The Elephant

Six blind men from Indostan visit an elephant to understand its nature, while each one touching a different part of the creature, one encountered it's sturdy side and likened it to a wall, another felt the sharp tusk and compared it to a spear, a third encountered the winding trunk and likened it to a snake, another felt the thick tail and thought it was a rope, in addition, another touched the leg and thought it was a tree, while the last felt the flapping ear and thought it was a fan. They argue fiercely about their interpretations until they realized that they are all partly right and partly wrong.
